The pre-existence of the Maison Bornet is an ancient limestone barn, well inserted in the dense built fabric of Ollon. To preserve the historicity of the building, the original openings are maintained, except in the west wall which, requiring more substantial interventions, houses a large window opening onto the landscape of the Rhone Valley. The side openings, on the other hand, recall their ancient function of guaranteeing the ventilation of the barn and at the same time guaranteeing greater privacy for the inhabitants. An anthracite-coloured exposed concrete floor extends over the entire ground floor, while the walls and the sloping roof are covered with fir panels painted in the same colour as the floor.
